Subject: Natural Gas Exporting

To whom it may concern at the DOE,

I am a concerned citizen. As your study for pros on exporting natural gas have been released to the public, it appears important to point out that the cons were not addressed and if they were the author of the report failed to include them. Many concerned citizens would like to see a moratorium on fracking and this plan to sell the surplus natural gas can only lead in one direction, with two results. More drilling and more money in the gas producers pockets. A natural gas boom has seriously damaged many beautiful places in our country. It has lead to un addressed health issues and environmental problems. We know these have been documented and wonder if any one conducting the study bothered to bring them forward. We also wonder if the drop in natural gas prices due to a large surplus will suddenly become soaring prices to meet export demands. Please re address our concerns. After all the government and all its departments was created to serve the people of these great United States and not those focused on exploiting our natural resources for their financial gain. We look forward to seeing new results that address our concerns.

Sincerely, Kerry Rose
